The Divine Proportion in Da Vinci's Masterpieces

The Divine Proportion, also known as the Golden Ratio, is an irrational number approximately equal to 1.618. Its presence in nature and art has been recognized since ancient times, inspiring harmonious and visually pleasing compositions. Da Vinci believed that this proportion was key to creating beauty and balance in his works.

In his iconic painting, the Mona Lisa, the Divine Proportion is evident in the proportions of her face and body. The ratio can also be found in the composition of the Vitruvian Man, his anatomical study of human proportions. The Last Supper, another masterpiece by Da Vinci, incorporates the Divine Proportion in the arrangement of the figures and the architecture.
